Q: Python & ASyncio: solving python gzip ssl errors (SSL: WRONG version number in temporary session key) In Python (Python 3.7) I am attempting to use the asyncio event loop and the gzip file compression API from asyncio.streams to send a stream of small integers over an HTTP GET request. I am able to initiate the request with no problem, but then I try to stream 100 integers using the following code: `import asyncio import time import socket import gzip import requests from typing import Type, List async def send_stream(addr: str, loop: asyncio.AbstractEventLoop): sock = socket.socket(socket.AF_INET, socket.SOCK_STREAM, 0) await asyncio.shield(sock.connect(addr)) sock.sendall(b'GET /{ } HTTP/1.1\r Host: { }\r Accept-Encoding: gzip\r \r ' .format(addr.encode('utf-8'), addr.encode('utf-8')).encode('utf-8')) if sock.has_ipv6(): raise IOError('cannot do IPv6 on Windows') await asyncio.sleep(10) sock.close() conn = await loop.run_in_executor(None, requests.get, addr, compress=True) sock = socket.socket(socket.AF_INET, socket.SOCK_STREAM, 0) await asyncio.shield(sock.connect(addr)) gzip_conn = gzip.open(conn, 'wb') for item in range(100): gzip_conn.write(b'{ } '.format(item)) gzip_conn.close()`

Q: How does speed control work in an electric car? How do we control the speed of a vehicle using electric motor? My question is very simple, I'm just curious to know the basic working and important things in this field. A: From the document : Under some EPA test conditions (e.g., at high loads, vehicle speed, level of EPA-mandated electric stopping technology present in the vehicle), the range of electric and other hybrid electric vehicles are approximately equivalent. Basically, as far as the big picture goes, a hybrid electric vehicle is like any other vehicle. They have to take turns, stop, go forward, turn around, accelerate, slow down or brake. The additional components of a hybrid electric vehicle (e.g. electric motor/battery, inverter, regenerative braking) are basically standard components of any hybrid vehicle. The only difference is that they're controlled by an ECU. This document also has more info. A: Generally it's done with a throttle. Batteries are preferred over mechanical transmission, because they can provide instantaneous torque without the weight of a transmission. Q: Running SSIS packages in BIDS I am trying to install a SSIS package into BIDS, so I can query data, but it is telling me that: Error code 0xC0209051 occurred. [1] An error occurred during execution of the SQL command, [1] [1] null How can I fix this? What would I be looking for? A: This happened to me when updating from SSDT for VS 2010 to VS 2012... SSDT supports two other environments besides VS - SSIS 2012 and SQL Server Data Tools (SSDT) for SQL Server 2008 Now that you have SSDT for VS 2012, I assume it just displays an error when you add a package, rather than installing it. You can fix this by going through the same process you use to run your packages. After selecting "New Project->Other Project Types->SSIS Project" you should be presented with the option to 'Add Connection' from the 'Package Manager' part of the drop down.
